The cherry pickers' quartette was better than ever. Their selections. The Old Orker Rucket. Annie Laurie, When You and I Were Young, Maggie, and others, were roundly applauded, and they were forced to respond to encores.

The only incident that marred the missaure of the evening came when the last act was about three-quarters over, when three score or more men and women started to rush for the door. When the audience is watching with deep interest the closing event a plot it is disconcerting, to say it ask, to have people bobbing up in front shutting off the stage and creating more or less disturbance by banging soats, trampling over other people's feet and trampling up the aides. It is in a way unjust to those who desire to show their appreciation of the efforts of the players to please their at oliving by remaining in their seats until the curtain falls.

INTENTIONAL PASS HAS NOT

DISAPPEARED AS YET

The intentional pass has not entirely disappeared from the national pastime despite the efforts of the rulemakers last year to bring about a change. One reads of an intentional pass at Shibe park in Philadelphia last week to Walter Pipp in order to bring to the plate no less a personage than Babe Ruth. From the reports, it may be taken for granted that the plan of Walter Kinney to hand out a pass was apparent to the fans. This is the point on which the rulemakers should have agreed. Leave the decision on the pass entirely to the umpire. If it becomes apparent to the arbiter that the boxman is trying to walk one batsman to first base, immediately enforce the rule that allows all runners on the bases to advance. The intentional pass cropped out during the training season and now it is beginning to pop up in the regular big league games. A rule such as was made last winter falls in its intend and is more or less a travesty, if pitchers are allowed to get away with the tricks they have this spring.

10 TO 14 PLAYERS ON TEAM

The land is pow full of ball players in all stages of development and perfection. There are at present almost as many of them in one league of eight clubs as could be counted in the whole country during the first 10 years of the national game. It was sometimes a difficult matter for the pioneers to collect a sufficient number of players to present a "full field" and then again there was an overflow of ambitious and enthusiastic individuals to prove more than enough. That was no doubt the reason why no limit was set to the number of participants in a game. But in 1858 the number was definitely fixed at nine, and it has remained so to the present day.

In 1876 an attempt was made to introduce a tenth man, a right shoriston, but the idea found little encouragement. It was adopted here and there by amateur teams, but the professionals apparently never gave it more than a passing thought although the change was favored by more than one promibent, although the change was favored by more than one promibent, although the change was favored by more than one promibent, although the change was favored by more than one promibent, although the change was favored by more than one promibent, although the change was favored by more than one promibent, although the change was favored by more than one promibent, although the change was favored by more than one promibent, although the change was favored by more than one promibent, although the change was favored by more than one promibent, although the change was favored by more than one promibent, although the change was favored by more than one promibent although the change was favored by more than one promibent.

Young trotters of that age probably have worked that fast at this time of the year, but Hyde believes none ever was sitten a mark as fast as early as April year, but Hyde believes none ever was given a mark as fast as early as April 21, especially over a half-mile track.

Hyde says Adelaide Guy trotted the last half of her record mile in 1.07, while the first quarter was negotiated in 22 seconds, a 2.08 gait. Linnehan had planned to ship the filly home from Pinehurst, but on account of poor transportation facilities, she will go to Cleveland next week with the other members of the Hyde stable.
